the International Competitive Bidding (ICB) procedure. According to this procedure, for procurement of equipment or package of equipment, the foreign technical collaborator makes recommendations to the project authorities for placement of orders on specific vendor(s), after a technical and commercial evaluation of the bids received from prequalified vendors on a global basis including India. However, the project authorities and the Indian co-contractor are also actively involved in procurement. While the project authorities have the right under the contract, not to accept the recommendations of the foreign technical collaborator regarding any equipment, and ask the latter for reconsideration of his recommendation, the latter also has the right under the contract, not to take any responsibility in regard to the performance of the equipment concerned, in case his recommendation is not accepted by the project authorities.

The ICB procedure itself and, in particular, the active involvement of the project authorities and the Indian co-contractor in this procedure, ensure that no cuts are received by any party from the manufacturers of equipment.
